

TIME TRAVEL: A PHILOSOPHER'S GUIDE

Join Dr Steph Rennick to examine stories about time travel, viewed through a philosophical lens.

Could you go back in time and kill your younger self? Can objects or information come from nowhere? Does traveling in time predestine your future actions, and does that undermine your free will? Come and learn how your favourite films, novels and video games answer these questions, and learn what a philosopher thinks makes good time travel fiction.

Dr Steph Rennick has a joint PhD from the University of Glasgow and Macquarie University and is a member of the Centre for the Philosophy of Time at Università degli Studi di Milano. She has appeared on BBC Radio 4 and the Daily Dot's Parsec Podcast.

This talk is organised by the department of philosophy at the University of Reading and funded by the Royal Institute of Philosophy.

For more information, contact Dr Nat Hansen: n.d.hansen@reading.ac.uk

6 March 19:00–20:30 | Doors open 18:30 | Reading Town Hall
Admission free | Open to the public | Cash bar available